Gull Cries

Two years since I walked the shore soothed by the varied rhythm of breaking, receding, two years of Covid.

Rocks on their way to sand, lengths of slippery sea weed drawn in, washed back by the ceaseless tide.

Fear washes through this inland city into our bodies hiding in houses,
spirits abrade.

Gulls glide
over sea, over sand circle for food, for a mate, for the pleasure of riding the wind.

We tumbled creatures gleam sometimes like stones picked, wet and polished, from the sea, held, warmed, treasured.

Remembering John Pendleton

Long time Shoaler John Braman Pendleton passed away on September 26th. John attended both Arts and Natural History weeks. His stepdaughter Laura Donovan writes: John was as much of a dad to me as he was to all the kids in our blended family. It hardly begins to express the depth of this loss to say that he will be missed.

His obituary can be found here:
